FRESH AIR FUND BOON TO CHILDREN

Many Little Ones of This City Think Trees and Green Fields Myths.

Do you know Dannie? Neither did we until a day or so ago. He is a simple little soul, but he has a great need, which the following letter was written to make known:

Fresh Air Fund, New York Tribune, New York.

York The New York Tribune, see York Tribune is doing with its Fresh Air Pund. I know of no more beautiful charity. Recently we took 250 children of the Sunday school for a picnic. A little girl, nine years old, told me on the way back that this was the first time she had ever been in the country. Some time ago we were showing motion pictures of irds building nests. A high school girl, six-een years of age, told me that she had ever seen a bird's nest. These are not the poorest children, but belong to parents who annot afford a summer outing. You deserve hope that your income hope that your best success, I am, your cer. Wishing you best success, I am, you cer. CHRISTIAN F. REISNEI

The other day a nurse in one of the public dispensaries requested The Tribne Fund to send away for her a group f twenty-eight children, and she losed her letter with the statement: "Of these twenty-eight children I KNOW that fifteen have never had a glimpse of the country."

And right here, in logical sequence, And right here, in logical sequence, comes a letter about a boy who not only has been, but is there, and will remain for the rest of the summer. During the winter this lad is "Buttons" in a private school. One of the teachers in the school took an interest in him and volunteered to take him to her country home for the summer if The Tribune Fund would pay his railroad fare. The boy was sent some time ago. This letter tells how he is enjoying the vacation:

And now, having been introduced to Dannie, and having learned a little shout the Fresh Air Fund, don't you want to send it five dollars so that Dannie may see the country—and per-haps five more for each of his "two so that the three can go to-

Head of Big Ice Cream Concern Started Career as Seller of Berries in Middletown.

James M. Horton, manufacturer of James M. Horton, manufacturer of ice cream, died yesterday at his home, 112 West 126th st. Mr. Horton was born in Orange County on August 3, 1835. He began his business career as a seller of berries in Middletown, N. Y., and when twenty-two years old was made president of the Orange County Milk Association.

Eleven years later he went into the ice cream business, an industry with which he was identified until his death. The ice cream company which bears his name is one of the largest in the world. Mr. Horton was ninth in descent from Barnabas Horton, who came to this country from England in 1633, and who was one of the founders of Southold, Long Island.

Born on his father's farm in Orange County, he entered the ice cream business not from choice, but to save his capital, which he invested in it, and which he feared he would lose unless the evidence that there is need for a second control of the committee was the evidence that there is need for a second control of the committee was the evidence that there is need for a second control of the committee was the evidence that there is need for a second control of the committee was the evidence that there is need for a second control of the committee was the evidence that there is need for a second control of the committee was the evidence that there is need for a second control of the committee was the control of the committee was the second control of the committee was the control of the committee of the committee was the control of the committee of the committee was the control of the committee o

In his address the Mayor said:

As the result of the study of those interested in the care of the babies in the City of New York it is apparent that improvement in their protection against disease can be accomplished only if there is a hearty cooperation between the citizens in charge of Baby week came to a joyous end yesterday with outings for 20,000 mothers and babies on excursion steamers and tugboats. Father Knickerbocker provided a doctor and nurses for every boat and his kind-hearted sons and daughters provided large quantities of crackers and mill and candy.

While such things as germs and tenement house discomfort were forgotten for the day by the happy mothers and babies, back in the city Father Knickerbocker was pondering over the things he had learned during the week about the needs of the babies.

At 3 o'clock the baby week committee met at City Hall, where Mayor Mitchel, after thanking them for their labors, outlined a programme for making every week to come a better baby week.

departments of the city government which are in a position to assist the mothers and bables in their homes and in public places.

The following needs are felt, and should in some way be satisfied:
Additional milk stations should be established in districts not covered and where the infant mortality has not been materially reduced since 1911.

There should be a stimulation and a bringing about o' effective co-operation between citizens of the outlying districts and the city authorities in the work of reducing infant mortality. This is particularly needed in the Borough of Queens and in certain sections of Brooklyn and The Bronx. There should be increased hospital facilities for the care of sick infants and children. It has been estimated that 1,000 additional beds are needed.
